

Darkness

Words and Music by Nicolas Aliberti
Copyright 2011

Opening her eyes as she's coming to, examining her skin,
Thinking out loud to herself, "Where has he gone and where have I been?"
Answers aren't coming and she knows it as the agony begins.

In her mind she sees a pair of eyes, a shadow, but the memory turns to mud.
Doesn't recognize the smell of fear and yet she knows the taste of Blood.
Its not clear where she's headed when she bursts into a run,
and shouts up past the heavens to her final setting sun:

Tell me where is my Darkness, where did it go?
I can't see it no more , I need it to grow.
I would be too obliged if you'd kindly bestow some of your Darkness.
Gimme some Darkness, Gimme some Darkness.

"Please let the sun drop down!" He sees her, feels her, smells her from his earthly den.
Been a thousand years and yet he can't believe its happening again.
When murder turns to motherhood--too late: the blood is set.
Begin a transformation that she'll never soon forget. Screaming:

Where is my Darkness, where did it go?
I can't feel it no more, I need it to grow.
I would be so excited if you could just show me some Darkness.
Gimme some Darkness, Gimme some Darkness.

Eternity's revenge: they're subject to a grim routine:
By day a lover's nightmare though by night a waking dream.
The ancient chain of blood that binds, the weight is so profound.
From far below at six feet deep, two lovers cry "Please let the sun drop down!"

Please let the sun drop down, the sun drop down...